On Sunday, February 24, 2008, Unicorn organized a documentary projection which launched the theme "Unicorn Acting". In this section, which attempts a more "practical" approach to everyday reality through a socio-political standpoint, the first event hosted the documentary "Zeitgeist". The Zeitgeist was a perfect introduction to this section, as it introduced us to three different areas of human control.

In particular, zeitgeist is a documentary divided into three sections. The first is the Christian religion, its similarities in comparison with earlier religions, and its use to manipulate people.

The second section concerns the historical event of the collapse of the Twin Towers on 11 September 2001 and the effects of the otherwise "internal coup" that happened in the U.S. that day. The third section deals with the economy, as it is shaped by the banks and the people behind them.

The acceptance of the movie by friends and acquaintances who honored us with their presence at this event (including Dr. Paul LaViolette), was shown not only by the strong demand for copies of the film after the screening, but also by comments about the movie in the discussion that followed.

The discussion moved on to the messages given to the film and to the ways of defense / action against the efforts made to control our minds, our pocket, our behavior and our lives in general. This conclusion once again referred to the necessity of our internal inclinations for change to occur first in the individuality of man and hence in the world. So we all have to act in principle, but individually and collectively to bring about the changes we see in our daily lives, beyond the control and fear of differences, with open eyes and clear mind. That is the goal of Unicorn Acting.
